

CLAIM:

Social networking can make family relationships complicated.

A Supporting Evidence

"Family living abroad can be kept abreast of the latest happenings in your world as quickly as those living next door."

(Reference: Source #3)

B Supporting Evidence

"The point is that by all of us sharing our experiences, both good and bad, on social networking sites, we're able to empathize with each other."

(Reference: Source #3)

C Supporting Evidence

"I suspect future generations will be unable to distinguish between meaningful relationships and casual acquaintances."

(Reference: Source #2)

D Supporting Evidence

"Youngsters especially could become convinced that they are more important than anyone else, and that what they have to say should be read and responded to by a wider audience."

(Reference: Source #2)

E Supporting Evidence

"The very concept of privacy seems to be inexorably eroding"

(Reference: Source #2)

F Supporting Evidence

"It's entirely possible to have hundreds of friends on Facebook. They may not be friends you know on a personal level and spend time with in the real world on a weekly basis. But they're friends nevertheless."

(Reference: Source #2)